Noncompliance, problem behavior and sleep disturbances

March 14

Understanding and Preventing Noncompliance and Problem Behavior

Although a diagnosis of autism is not dependent on problem behaviors like self-injury, aggression, disruptive behavior, or noncompliance, the probability of two or more of these problem behaviors occurring with regularity is higher in children with autism than in children with other developmental disabilities. The first goal of this full-day seminar is to develop knowledge relevant to the learning principles that are useful for understanding the development of noncompliance and problem behavior and that provide the foundation for a comprehensive prevention program. The second goal is to impart capacity for implementing class-wide, small group, and individualized prevention programs aimed at promoting fundamental social skills that have been shown to compete with the development or persistence of noncompliance and problem behavior.

Understanding and Addressing Sleep Problems

Sleep problems are prevalent among children, especially children with autism. Addressing sleep problems can be challenging, and when left unaddressed, sleep problems can lead to or worsen other behavior problems such as aggression and noncompliance while also making learning in school difficult. The goal of this workshop is to provide attendees with a sound understanding of factors that worsen and improve children's ability to achieve age-appropriate amounts of sleep as well as strategies for addressing common issues such as difficulty falling asleep or staying asleep and nighttime routine noncompliance. As a result, attendees will have a better understanding of how family members and support staff can work as a team to promote the healthy sleep of the children in their care. The seminar will involve opportunities to design individualized and parent-friendly treatments for specific sleep problems and a review of strategies to prevent sleep problems from occurring.

Materials

All attendees will receive a detailed workbook covering all aspects of the workshop including extensive references.
